A recorded life story for the families you serve

Families you work with often ask what they should do while a parent can still tell their stories. Telloom records those stories on video with a professional interviewer, then gives the family a private archive they can keep.

What your clients get

- A professional interviewer who prepares from what the family wants on record, using a library of 640+ prompts
- Remote sessions anywhere in the United States, or in person in the New York City area
- About three to four hours of guided conversation per session, edited lightly so it still sounds like them
- A private archive with transcripts, written summaries, and search, with unlimited family viewers, ready in about two weeks

Two ways to work with us

Introduce a family

We send you a short link to share. The family watches real examples, books a free planning call, and we take it from there. Families you introduce get a 50-photo scan included (normally $200). We don't pay referral fees.

Give a session as a client gift

Buy any package for a client family and we invoice you directly. We include a short note from you when we deliver the archive, such as "This recording is a gift from [your firm]." The family can choose to leave it off.

Why it fits

Wealth advisors and family offices. A recorded life story is something the whole family keeps, and when you give it, your name is on it.

Aging Life Care professionals. After a diagnosis, recording a parent's stories is one concrete thing a family can do now.

Estate and elder-law attorneys. The video version of the legacy letter or ethical will, in the client's own voice.

Senior move managers. Downsizing turns up objects with stories attached. We record the stories and document heirlooms.
